Review

A raw, blatant, disturbing, inspiring story to read....,
Review by Rhea Alexis M. Banks (Chicago, Illinois)

Wow....It is very hard to rate this book as this is someone's life, who's to say what rating it should have as it just is. I give this novel a 5 stars for its honesty and thoroughness. I give 5 stars to the gift of experiencing this raw, blatant, disturbing, inspiring story. I give this story a 5 stars because of the survival and triumph. I give this author 5 star for sharing her story and living through it!!

A fine pick for those looking for an inspirational memoir,
By Midwest Book Review (Oregon, WI USA) -

It's a long road to just having a stable life. "Who Said It Couldn't Be Done?: A Diamond from the Rough" is a memoir from Denise Jones as she tells her story of her long road to some semblance of normalcy in life. Simple and profound, her story will prove inspiring and reminding that anyone can recover from anything. "Who Said It Couldn't Be Done?" is a fine pick for those looking for an inspirational memoir

From the Author

My words to the reader, this is "A touching story about overcoming life's obstacles and prevailing against the odds".I written this book not because I want to make money, but that someone's life can and will be CHANGED. No one knows like I no, how it feels to live as a man but trapped in a woman body for over 15 long years. My message is to bring HOPE to the one who feels hopeless.

From the Back Cover

WHO SAID IT COULDN'T BE DONE?This book candidly chronicles one woman's journey from Chicago's west side ~ involving poverty, incest, drug addiction, incarceration and lesbianism ~ to sobriety, spiritual redemption and inner peace. In Denise's words: "Deep insecurity and inferiority, drug addiction and role confusion tormented me for many years. Often I wondered if I were a boy or a girl; if I were human or an animal. Who am I?

What am I? Why am I?Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new. 2nd Corinthians 5:17
